FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

Conway Family Wines' Rancho Arroyo Grande Mourvèdre
Named a "Wine of the Year" by *Wine Spectator

"...A Wine and a Winery That You Should Know About" Wrote Matt Kramer

NEW YORK, Dec. 14, 2010—Conway Family Wines, an award winning, boutique family-owned winery on California's Central Coast, today announced that Wine Spectator contributor Matt Kramer included the winery's Rancho Arroyo Grande Mourvèdre 2007 in his coveted "My Wines of the Year" column in the December 2010 issue. It was one of only three wines in the world to achieve this rare distinction.

"We are deeply honored by this recognition, especially since it was our very first vintage," said Gillian Conway, Vice President of Communications, Conway Family Wines. "The Mourvèdre was truly a labor of love. We are so excited that it resonated with a wine luminary like Matt Kramer in such a prestigious magazine as Wine Spectator."

Kramer's theme this year was "wines of surprise." He noted that Mourvèdre, a renowned grape in Provence's Bandol district, isn't a varietal that is often pursued in California. He wrote, "this wine could give a top Bandol a run for its euro: dense, elegant, suffused with Mourvèdre's signature spice and dust notes yet devoid of the sometimes excessive hardness that can accompany Mourvèdre's famously tough tannins." He added that it signaled a "potentially great vineyard site...a wine and winery that you should know about."
